ELT Catalogue Australia 2020

Learning for a lifetime

In today's global environment, people move between careers and locations, building on their skillset to succeed in new ways. Analysts agree that lifelong learning and adaptability will be the keys to success, both for learners and for educators.

In this context, we believe that it's ever more important to offer language learning resources that are purposeful and support learners in reaching their goals, with results they can measure and share.

At Pearson English, we're working together with educators and learners, content specialists and expert partners to create learning and teaching experiences that really work.

You'll find the results in the pages of this catalogue

How can the Global Scale of English help you?

Take the guesswork out of student progress

The Global Scale of English (GSE) is the first truly global English language standard, allowing teachers to measure learner progress more accurately and more easily.

Based on research involving over 6000 teachers from more than 50 countries, it extends the Can Do statements of the Common European Framework of Reference (CEFR) to support teachers of different learner profiles: Adults learning General English, Academic English and Professional English and Young Learners.

The numerical scale from 10 to 90 enables teachers and learners to understand more about language proficiency within a CEFR level.

The GSE helps learners answer these key questions:

- How good is my English?
- Am I progressing?
- What do I need to do next?

In this catalogue, you can see the GSE and CEFR levels for each course, and learn more about how the GSE underpins everything we do.

Save time on planning, gain time for teaching

The Global Scale of English Teacher Toolkit is a free, online database that brings together learning objectives, grammar and vocabulary in one place, all mapped to the GSE and CEFR.

To find the most relevant content, begin by choosing the type of student and type of English you're interested in and then use the GSE/CEFR slider to select the right level. The toolkit's functionality makes it quick and easy to search for the most level-appropriate content to support your lessons or use to adapt your curriculum to meet the needs of your students.

The GSE Teacher Toolkit illustrates what needs to be mastered within a CEFR level, helping to take the guesswork out of student progress. All of which makes it easier for you to identify gaps, measure student progress, provide meaningful feedback and pinpoint areas of focus.

Since the GSE Teacher Toolkit contains the entire GSE framework, institutions and ministries of education can use this content to support the development of curriculum.

Let's support
our learners in meeting their needs

Contemporary adult learners require new approaches and materials that address new needs in their social, professional, and academic English. At Pearson we conduct research with teachers and learners to make sure that our courses meet those needs.

New levels

Roadmap

The right route for every learner

The dual track approach – developing reading, writing and listening alongside speaking, gives you the flexibility you need to teach each class how you want. The focus on developing sub-skills ensures that you are teaching not just practicing these skills.

See p.10–11

Having clear goals is essential

Learners have goals and those goals can change. Researchers and teachers have known for decades that goals are vitally important motivations in education in general and language learning in particular.

The Global Scale of English learning objectives provide a tool to understand learners' needs, pinpoint what they know and what they don't, and personalise learning and teaching to their goals.

Monitor progress with our assessment programs

Assessment

Motivate adult learners to reach milestones during their language courses. Whether it is to place them initially in a course level, measure progress, or certify their skills, teachers can help adult learners stay on track to achieve their goals.

Roadmap

The right route for every learner

Roadmap is practical and communicative, and gets students talking with topics and tasks relevant to their world.

Each lesson starts with a communicative goal, then builds the language and skills to achieve it.

The unique twin-track approach allows you to adapt the material to your learners' needs and teach the language and skills they need to progress. So, in the fast-track route, every class covers essential language and speaking skills, while the extended route adds in-depth skills training in reading, writing and listening.

Comprehensive teacher support makes lessons easy to organise and fun to teach, however much time you have to prepare

Teaching sub-skills, not just practicing them...

Language is generally divided into two main areas: language systems (grammar, lexis, phonology and discourse) and language skills (listening, speaking, reading and writing). The latter of these can be further divided into sub-skills. These are things we do in our first language usually as subconscious processes

For example, if we're listening to an airport announcement, we'll selectively listen out for keywords and numbers related to our flight (destination, time, flight number, gate, etc.), a sub-skill known as scanning. If we're reading a summary of a talk in a conference programme, we'll skim over the description to get a general idea of what it's about. Likewise, we know how to interrupt a conversation politely to join in.

These sub-skills are things we generally take for granted in our first language. However, when learning another language, it's easy to become overly focused on understanding all the language or using the right words and phrases. As a result, these sub-skills often get overlooked.

To truly develop these skills and sub-skills with our learners, we need to teach specific strategies to help them develop. By focusing on teaching strategies, skills and sub-skills, we can help our students become more confident and proficient language learners.

Roadmap is a journey and the final destination is fluent speaking and confidence.

Why challenge is good for building language

Speakout uses authentic material which really engages learners both cognitively and effectively. It is challenging for them: learning a language is difficult, and it's really hard to understand fast spoken English.

Speakout supports learners and builds their confidence in their ability to deal with spoken language. Learners enjoy the challenge, and they really enjoy the material because it is satisfying for them to know that the material hasn't been written especially for the language classroom. It feels more real.

When teachers and students first start using Speakout, they often comment on this, saying that the course is more challenging than other courses at the level. We have found that ultimately both teachers and learners appreciate the challenge, that they feel better prepared for dealing with 'the real world' than they would if they only had exposure to graded material.

At the same time, within a level and a unit we vary the difficulty of texts so that some are easily accessible to students at that level.

Our main focus is to get the students speaking, and most teachers comment that their students talk a lot during the lessons (because they have something they genuinely want to speak about). They are given lots of opportunities to express their own ideas and opinions. Also, we try to give the learners really useful language, building their grammatical and lexical competence.

Antonia Clare & Steve Oakes

As teachers we often focus a lot on input... from the teacher to the student... but if you want to really improve your lessons, you need to focus more on what the students are doing.

How do language skills map to employability skills?

GSE Global Scale of English

Pearson has created an online database that can help teachers quickly and easily identify the language needs for a variety of jobs and industries. Built using the US Bureau of Labor Statistics O*NET jobs database, the Global Scale of English (GSE) Job Profiles enable teachers to find the learning objectives that support the development of specific skills for a given job or set of roles. The GSE Job Profiles can be found in the GSE Teacher Toolkit and accessed at english.com/gse.

Skills beyond qualifications

Being employable is often considered to be based on having the right professional qualifications and work experience.

These elements are still essential, so what's new? Why do we keep hearing the term 'employability skills' nowadays and what are the implications for the business English classroom?

The world of work continues to evolve: according to the World Economic Forum we are living in the era of the Fourth Industrial Revolution. Tough employment markets and rapid technological changes mean that employers are looking for candidates with specific combinations of skills whatever the position.

Some of the most sought after employability skills include: effective communication skills, working well in teams, having proven problem-solving abilities and showing initiative.

Business Partner is written with these skills in mind. There are dedicated communication skills lessons, projects and business workshops that develop (not just practice) these skills in every unit. Dramatised videos in the communication skills lessons encourage learners to reflect on the effectiveness of their own communication styles and the styles of others. Examples include push vs pull factors in influencing people and ways of giving and receiving feedback. Projects and business workshops offer opportunities for students to work on realistic case studies and show their initiative while solving business problems with their colleagues.

Business Partner helps students develop a marketable mindset at the same time as they develop and improve their English.

This course bridges that gap between university studies and professional life, and helps to further develop the skills for those already working in multinationals who want to climb the corporate ladder, go on an international assignment and communicate globally, and the career changers.

Business and corporate trainer

Balance your teaching

Exams require learners to demonstrate their skills in reading, listening, speaking and writing. While the exam tasks might not always be authentic, the skills needed to complete them are skills needed in everyday life.

This means teachers need to create lesson objectives that aim to help our students to understand the main point of a conversation, listen for agreement among speakers or identify a speaker's attitude, for example, in listening lessons.

In reading lessons, we can help students to identify how texts are structured, find specific information or infer information implied in a text.

In speaking lessons, we can help students to interact when discussing opinions, develop fluency and pronounce sentences with effective intonation.

Finally, in writing lessons, we can focus on how to structure different genres of text, write with an audience in mind and link ideas.

By focusing on sub-skills rather than just exam strategies, we can create a balanced syllabus that helps all of our students to improve their language skills, as well as prepare for an exam.

Lindsay Warwick

When focusing on sub-skills rather than exam strategies, we can help all of our learners to develop the skills they need to function in English in different contexts.

Teacher, trainer and materials writer

Let us help you
assess students' progress

Our suite of assessments helps you place students, benchmark their progress, and certify their achievement.

"Language learners make mistakes, this is inevitable and natural, and all part of the learning process. Teachers support learners by helping them to reflect on those mistakes and correcting them. This is, however, only part of the learning process. Good teachers help remediate learning but also extend learning by giving students tasks which challenge and stretch them. Pearson supports teachers and learners with the Benchmark tests which link test performance directly to Pearson courseware through the GSE to help remediate and to stretch!"

Bridging the gap

Studying abroad in an English-speaking country can be a daunting prospect for many students while also a fantastic opportunity for students to use their language skills in real-world situations and give their confidence a boost. But how can we help prepare them for success, so that they can really benefit from their experience abroad?

One way to do this is to develop their academic skills alongside their language skills. Academic skills encourage students to become more efficient learners. They give students the confidence to participate fully in English-speaking courses and are invaluable outside of the classroom and after they graduate. These skills, which include critical thinking and note-taking, are also highly transferable, and therefore vital for success in any career.

The skills students are expected to have when they start in higher education can be organised into five main categories:

- Academic Discourse – skills communicating effectively in debates, discussions and presentations
- Academic Text Strategies – skills for analysing academic texts in greater detail
- Academic Strategies – skills for understanding and responding critically to lectures
- Composition – skills for effective academic writing
- Comprehension – skills for understanding academic texts and lectures

University Success helps build these skills through its three strands: reading, writing, and oral communication skills, which are developed through studying a variety of authentic academic content; the sorts of lectures and texts they could expect to come across in their further studies.

> Academic skills encourage students to become more efficient learners. They give students the confidence to participate fully in English-speaking courses and are invaluable outside of the classroom and after they graduate.

Choose University Success if you want to:

- Integrate all essential skills
- Employ authentic academic content from university professors
- Apply intensive skills practice
- Focus on application and comprehension with guided exercises
- Have a transition level that mirrors the rigor of academic courses

Developing academic skills in the classroom

1 Academic Discourse: responding to and asking questions
In class discussions it's very easy to overlook the students who aren't speaking. By asking these students to prepare follow-up questions for the speakers, you can transform this activity into an active listening task.

2. Academic Text Strategies: looking for inferred meaning in texts
Being able to make inferences is a very important academic reading skill. It encourages students to 'read between the lines' and look for deeper meaning. Develop this skill without text first, using short videos or photographs, then move on to short texts.

3. Academic Strategies: writing effective notes
Effective note taking is an essential skill for your students to learn before they go on to further education. Using short videos, such as TED Talks, have students take notes while they watch. Then, in pairs or small groups, get your students to combine their notes to 'recreate the video'.

Authentic academic texts prepare students for further study

Advance in Academic Writing is designed to help students make a successful transition to college and university studies, where they need to write assignments in academic English.

It integrates active and critical reading, critical thinking, academic vocabulary building, academic writing style, and effective sentence structure and grammar around authentic academic texts. Students are taken through the research and writing processes they need to master to succeed in their studies.

- Authentic academic texts expose students to the type of reading they will encounter.
- Critical thinking covers in-depth analysis of the readings and the pitfalls of academic writing.
- Students develop vocabulary, grammar, and aspects of writing exemplified in the readings.
- Research skills, appropriate citation, and the more common citation styles are covered in detail.

4. Composition: developing a coherent argument
Producing coherent arguments is a vital skill for learners in higher education, and one that you can practice in the classroom. Find a model, written argument and cut it up into sections. Have your learners reorganise the text, and once correct, analyse the different components that make it coherent.

5. Comprehension: identifying specific ideas in academic texts and lectures
In the context of further education, students need to be able to provide evidence from a text itself. During class reading activities, have students get into the habit of underlining or highlighting parts of the text that they think support their answers, and discuss them during the feedback session.

Listening and understanding

Listening proficiency is essential for learning a second language, but it often takes a back seat to the teaching of reading, writing, and grammar.

In the Azar-Hagen grammar series, we include listening instruction. We teach students to hear common grammatical structures how they are actually spoken. For beginners, we teach obvious reductions like "gonna, "wanna," and "hafta", negative contractions, and how sounds change when they are combined. We include practice for these and many other features.

In the more challenging contexts for intermediate students, one of the biggest problems is hearing the auxiliaries in connected speech. They learn "she has studied for the exam" but will more likely encounter "she's studied" or "she uz studied." Endings are another critical area. We expect students to produce the correct plural, comparative, or participal ending, but at this level, many students don't even hear that an ending is there, much less different endings.

At higher levels we focus on more advanced grammar, like perfect modals, conditionals, and passives, to name a few. We teach patterns, such as reductions that occur with "could have", "should have", etc. But we take it to a higher level with extended listening and lecture practice.

We work with meaning, of course, but we provide targeted listening practice so students can better handle these structures in everyday, authentic speech.

More and more programs teach grammar communicatively.

Teachers who use this approach introduce a grammar structure in a natural, meaningful reading, then present and practice the structure in context and end up by setting up authentic-like situations in which students interact meaningfully while incorporating the new grammar point.

The role of the grammar teacher has gone beyond that of a transmitter of information about the target structure and arbiter of what is right and wrong in discrete sentences. Instead, the communicative grammar teacher introduces interesting, often content-based themes, and assigns thoughtful tasks. She or he coordinates team, group, and class work, manages classes in which students are doing different tasks, and becomes a resource person who provides students with the best access to the best material online and offline. In addition, the teacher facilitates activities to make sure that all goes smoothly. Grammar is taught through an integrated skills approach—listening, speaking, reading, and writing are all a part of the grammar class.

Responsibility for learning is shifting from the teacher to the learner. Motivation is generally higher, and results are better.

NO COPYING, SINGLE OR MULTIPLE, OF RECORDINGS IS PERMITTED.

The law allows for a reader to make a single copy of part of a book for purposes of private study. It does not allow the copying of entire books or the making of multiple copies of extracts.

Under no circumstances may schools photocopy materials for use in self-access centers, unless they have registered with CLA or an associated licensing agency and allow/use photocopying strictly in accordance with their regulations. If a school wishes to have multiple copies of a part of a book in a self-access center, then it must purchase the necessary number of printed books. There is no formal objection to schools physically cutting printed texts into parts and reassembling them in a way that seems appropriate, providing the books or parts of books are not then resold. It is not, however, a practice we would recommend.

In the case of audio recordings, it is permissible for a school to make a copy of an audio CD or file, keeping the original as a back-up. Only one copy may exist at any one time. As an example, a school may copy different parts of an original audio recording onto several CDs, providing that no part of the original exists in more than one copy at any one time. Therefore, if a school wishes to have three copies of one part of an audio recordings, it must have three originals.
